Research and innovation are vital to economic growth, not only in the UK but throughout Europe. The UK has one of the most productive research bases in the world and with changes to EU funding in sight it's important that we play our full part in influencing the debate.

This year's national research conference will provide one of the first opportunities to learn more about the REF2014. Through the Research Excellence Framework (REF) the funding councils in the UK aim to develop a competitive and sustainable research sector contributing to economic prosperity, national well-being and the dissemination of knowledge.

Now in its fifth year, this high profile conference brings together senior higher education representatives concerned with research, research councils, central government and private sector representatives to engage in a forward looking debate about the current state and future strategic development of UK research.
