The UK is perceived to provide world-class education, but will a tougher immigration policy result in a decline in the number of overseas students studying in the UK? How will 'highly trusted' colleges keep their reputation whilst stories about 'bogus' colleges are taking the upper hand?

In addition to attracting international students, how can FE export education and qualifications?

This groundbreaking conference will look at how colleges can develop new business and new ways of partnering with overseas governments, international partners and colleges abroad to provide the best training and qualifications in emerging markets.

Senior leaders responsible for international partnerships, recruitment and business development in the UK FE sector will come together to map the future of the internationalisation agenda and to discuss how FE colleges can benefit in the short, medium and long term.
