Enhancing Literacy and Numeracy

Next steps for Skills for Life and Functional Skills

Wednesday 6th July 2011, Westminster Studio, London SW1

Supported by:

157[®]
Furthering Education & Skills group

Speakers include:

Robert Pheasant

Head of Skills for Life, Learning and Skills Improvement Service (LSIS)

Jill Lanning

Chief Executive, Federation of Awarding Bodies

Karen Adriaanse HMI

National Adviser for Employability, Ofsted

Lee Davies

Deputy Chief Executive, Institute for Learning

Live and on-demand on policyreview.tv

Literacy and numeracy are fundamental skills and, while the evidence is clear that levels of attainment have increased over recent years, around one in five young people still enter the workplace without the numeracy skills they need for success. An estimated fifth of the economically active adults in England are still below this level of numeracy.

The majority of the 2020 workforce is already out of formal education.

The Wolf Review made a number of recommendations including ensuring that those on vocational routes post-16 continue to study English and mathematics.

We know that to maintain the drive to improve basic literacy, language and numeracy, and ensure all adults have a basic platform for employability, the skills system must respond to those already in employment.

Attend this conference and hear from sector leaders about the challenges and opportunities arising from the changes in 2011/12 including 19+ learning and eligibilities.
